Course Introduction:

Marketing is arguably the prime business function as all business organizations survive upon a foundation of sales, without which there can be no production or any other managerial activity. A marketing perspective is built on an adequate understanding of customer desires and decision processes. The notion of market orientation also requires an integrated understanding of the marketing environment. We will look at how market knowledge is gained through research and the application of analytical frameworks. This leads to informed decision making in marketing. The course has been designed to familiarize students with various concepts of marketing management such as segmentation, target and positioning (STP), branding.
